

After 2015 – The road towards
the next global development agenda

From New York to Paris: UN efforts to break the climate deadlock

twitter: #NYtoParis

- What can we expect from the UNSG's Climate Summit and how can it feed into the upcoming negotiations – both within the UNFCCC framework and the Post-2015 process?
- What are the major hurdles and what can be done to overcome them?
- How can we address extreme poverty without jeopardizing our common future?
- The SG's summit has leadership as one of its major themes – but who is brave enough to step up to the challenge?

After 2015 – The road towards
the next global development agenda

“I don’t belong to those who believe we are headed for disaster. I certainly believe in the future, but I’m not quite as naïve as our parents were, who believed that we live in the best of all possible worlds and that progress is inevitable. But I venture to be an optimist because I believe that there will always be a great many young people who are determined enough to fight for a decent future.”

Dag Hammarskjöld

The road from New York to Paris

Timeline

Eric Usher is acting Head of the Finance Unit within the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) Energy Branch, charged with engaging the finance sector in the shift to greener low carbon economies. He has a long-standing experience of working to foster low-carbon development, and has published widely in the field.

Meena Raman is head of the climate programme at Third World Network (TWN), an independent international organisation that promotes Third World country interests in the area of global development.

Anna Lindstedt is Ambassador for Climate Change at the Swedish Ministry of the Environment. She has been a diplomat since 1990 serving, among other things, as Ambassador to Mexico (2006–2011) and Ambassador to Vietnam (2003–2006).

Dag Hammarskjöld
Foundation

Dag Hammarskjöld
Foundation

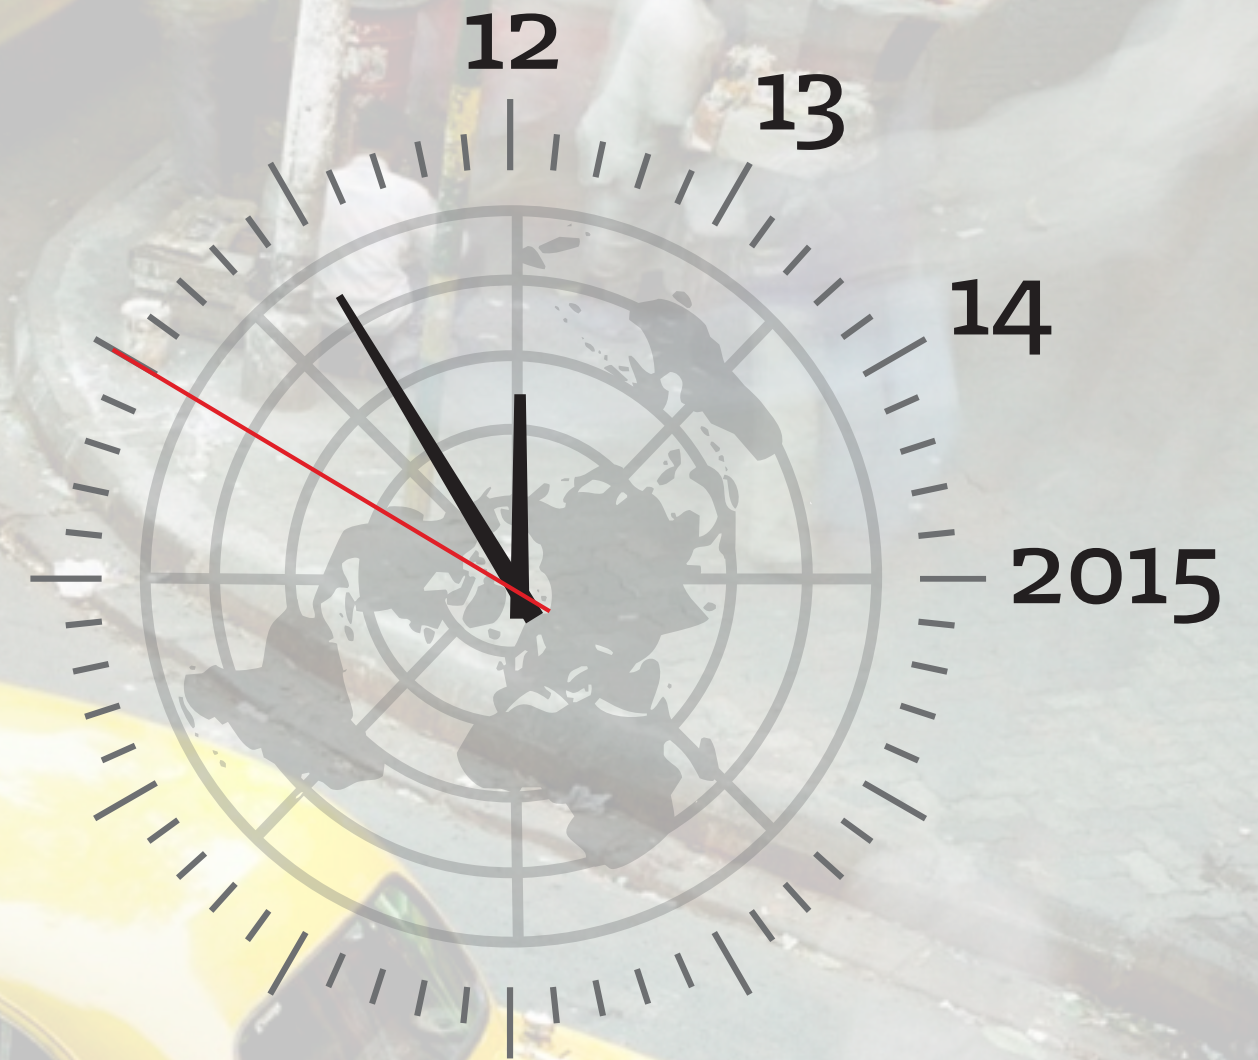

After 2015 – The road towards
the next global development agenda

More information about the,
reports, seminar series, videos, analyses, and upcoming working papers can be found at www.dhf.uu.se/after-2015

or

www.millenniemaalen.nu

Dag Hammarskjöld
Foundation